

OPINION
LETTERS

Do Religion and Science Clash or Coexist?

Nov. 14, 2021, 11:30 a.m. ET

Matija Medved

To the Editor:

In her essay about faith and science not being at odds, the only faith Tish Harrison Warren identifies is Christianity. World Religion Day notes that there are more than 4,000 recognized religions in the world, although most people belong to one of five major religions worshiping different gods. So, in which religion and in which god should we place our faith?

Although there are various opinions on how science is done, in the end there is only one scientific method in which to place our faith. People turn to religion when they cannot explain something and to science when they wish to explain it.

J. David Archibald
San Diego

The writer is professor emeritus of biology at San Diego State University.